Prince Alfred's Assassination

By the late mail we are put in possession of the particulars of the vile attempt on the life of Prince Alfred, which has called forth universal horror and desire for revenge. The affair turns out to have been long contemplated, of a much more serious nature than we have hitherto supposed, and pursued with a blood thirsty determination really appalling. The confession of the wretch O'Farrell must have an immense influence all over the world. When ten men in the calm possession of reason select a little boy to draw lots, who shall obey the hellish commands of the Fenian Order, it shows a state of things so horrible that we cannot be surprised that 20,000 people in Sydney should assemble at a few hours notice to hold an indignation meeting, or that the murderer came near being torn to pieces by the populace. But while hanging was too good for such lost wretches, we still rejoice the majesty of the law was sustained, and society vendicated in a legitimate manner; The Sydney Herald says :-

The 12th of March will ever be a me-morable day—one to be thought of with feelings of the deepest humiliation, yet not unmingled with thankfulness: of humiliation and regret that on the soil of New South Wales, and amidst festivities got up for a benevolent object, a ruflian could be found base enough to attempt the life of the son and representative of the most virtuous and most beloved sovereign that ever graced the throne of our mother isle; and of thankfulness that the hand of an All-wise Providence turned aside the deadly bullet and diverted the assassin's As a sailor, His Royal Highness has taken much interest during his stay in Sydney in the Sailor's Home. The directers of that institution thought that an opportunity was offered of clearing off its debts by giving some entertainment during the Prince's visit, and he readily granted his patronage. A picnic was degranted in partoning. It provides the guests to Clontarf; and, to give celat to the occasion, twenty-five yachts, belonging to the Royal Sydney and Prince Alfred Yacht squadrons, went down, anchored in lines off Clontarf, and dressed ship. About 1 o'clock His Royal Highness accompanied by His Excellency the Six steamers conveyed the ness, accompanied by His Excellency the Earl of Belmore, the Countess of Belmore, Viscount Newry, the Hon Elliot Yorke, Miss Gladstone, Captain Beresford, Mr. Toulmin, and Lieutenant Haig, left Sydney in the Fairy steam yacht, and arrived off Clontarf about two p.m. The party on Contart about two pairs are partially as a content of the luncheon tent, and after partaking of refreshments, His Royal Highness, the Countess of Belmore, and Sir William Manning, droceeded towards the royal marquee, where her ladyship remained. The Prince and Sir William Manning then walked across the green towards where the Galatea band were stationed; and, when about fifty yards from the band, the assassin, whose name is O'Farrell, walked out from under the trees which fringe the beach of the scene of the festivities and advanced at a right angle to the Prince. On getting behind angle to the Prince. On getting beaming him he turned sharply round, drew a Springfield company's revolver, and with the muzzle of it almost touching the Prince's back, fired at his spine. The bullet passed through the centre seam of his coat through the centre of his braces, entered his back about half an inch from the junction of the ninth rib and the ver the bone, traversed the rib round to about two inches under the breast bone and there louged. The Frince's lower limbs were at once paralysed, and he fell to the ground, exclaiming. "Oh God! He has broken my back." Sir Wm. Manning hearing the report behind him turned sharply round, and as he did so the assassin shouted "stand back," correct him with his revolver, and sapposed to the stand back, or the same stand back is the same stand back of the same stand back or the same sta and there lodged. The Prince's lower the assass in shouted "stand back," corrected him with his revolver, and snapped the cap. Fortunately the pistol missed fire, and before he could again fire a coachbuilder named Vial, rushed on the ruffian and clasped him round the body. O'Farrell then attempted to shoot Mr. Vial, and a desperate struggle ensued. O'Farrell tried to shoot the Prince again as he laid on the ground, but his aim was diverted by Vial striking down the pistol, and the bullet, diverted from the prostrate Prince, went through the foot of a merchant named Thorne. In another second O'Farrell was surrounded on all sides and almost torn to pieces. The police would never have taken him off the ground alive but for Lord Newry having a saked if he had anything to say why sensaged the country of the discount of the program of the standard and the ref. (Ar Asphall and the grived at Sydney the moroing of that day, and his colleague Mr Dally, who came 300 miles down the country or until Morday. This was granted, and on Monday the trial commenced. There was no dispute as to the facts, but an acquital vas asked for on the grounds of the prisoner's insanity. It was proved that some months ago he was insance, but the evidence went to show that it was rather the effect of drink than otherwise. Mr Asphall addressed the jury for nearly two hours. Fortunately the pistol missed fire, and before he could again fire a coachbuilder named Vial, rushed on the police would never have taken him off the ground alive but for Lord Newry having brought the Galatea's men to aid them. Again and again the people forced a passage through the police, and tried to drag him away, until at last every thread of clothing was torn off the wretch. The police still faced the crowd, but, retreating towards the steamer's wharf, along which O'Farrell was dragged on board the steamer Paterson, the plank was thrown overboard, thus severing communi cation with the shore, and the steamer moved away. By this time several hun-

The scene round the Prince's marque was something fearful; numbers of ladies were to be seen fainting and in hysterics; were to be seen fainting and in hysteries; men whom no amount of danger could terrify, with faces white with rage, but not through fear, asked, "what will they say in England?"—"Oh, if he should die, what will his mother say?" and other exclamations of a similar character. About two hundred joined hands and formed a cordon round the tent in which formed a cordon round the tent in which the sufferer lay, attended by Dr. Watson of H. M. S. Challenger, and several medical gentlemen residents of this city.

The Prince progressed very favorably towards recovery, and on the 29th ult. again appeared in public, and was received with far greater public enthusiasm than on his first arrival. He is now able to attend to his duty, has got his ship ready for sea, and if the Panama mail arrives before Saturday next, will then leave for England direct, via Cape Horn. If the England direct, via Cape Horn. If the Mataura is not then in he will leave on the day following her arrival. A memorial to celebrate the Prince's escape has been decided upon, and already £10,000 have been subscribed towards a Prince Alfred Hospital.

THE ASSASSIN.

THE ASSASIN.

The monster who, through the Prince, committed so foul an outrage upon the people of this colony is maned H. J. O'Farrell, and an Irishman by birth. His father was an old colonist of Victoria, and kept a butcher's shop in Melbourne for many years.

P. A. D. O'Farrell, the assassin's brother, was at one time a Melbourne solicitor in large practice, one of the most prominent was at one time a Melbourne solicitor in large practice, one of the most prominent members of the Roman Catholics Church, and legal adviser of Bishop Gould, but absconded, leaving a not very honest reputation. II. J. O Farrell, who now awaits the behests of the law, is about 33 years of ago, stands about 5 feet 10 inches in height, hair light howe, whiskers and moustache a ago, stands about 5 feet 10 inches in height, hair light brown, whiskers and moustache a shade darker. After having been in business for some time at Ballarat, he left Victoria about eight years ago, and went to Paris to study for the Church. He pursued his studies for some time, and in the course of his stay in Europe visited Rome. He came out again to Victoria in 1862, and after continuing his studies for some time, finding his health giving way he returned to Ballarat and resumed business as a general storekeeper, in Doveton street. While at Ballarat he was looked upon as a leading member rat he was looked upon as a leading member of the Catholic Church, and took a warm and intimate interest in its internal affairs. The absonding of his brother seems to have The absonding of his brother seems to have occasioned him considerable pecuniary loss, and he determined to go to Sydney. Those who knew him well spoke of him as a man of gentlemanty demeanor, but exceedingly excitable, and of a very violent and misanthropical disposition. He is also spoken of as one who, having attached himself to an idea, would pursue it at any cost to himself or others. He arrived in Sydney about October last and ladged for a short time at the or others. He arrived in Sydney about October last, and lodged for a short time at the Currency Lass Hotel, at the corner of Pitt and Hunter streets. It is said that he was turned out of this hotel for not paying his board, and he then removed to Powell's (the Clarendon), at the corner of Hunter and George streets. During his stay there, his letters came to the care of Archdeacon McEncree or Dr Forrest, neither of whom had the most remote idea of what O'Farrell's true character was. While at Powell's he several times gave expression to disloyal language, of which little notice seems to have been taken. It now appear quite apparent that he came here for the purpose of taking the Prince's life, and one of his first taking the Prince's life, and one of his first acts was to endeavor to buy a second-hand guo, on or about the 21st January. He took a room on the Circular Quay, from which the Prince could have been shot, but feared to injure Earl Belmore. The ruffian appears to have watched the Prince closely; indeed, he admits that on two occasions he would have shot at him, but feared to injure those by whom the Prince was accompanied. He endeavored to obtain admittance to the lancy dress ball given at the Opera House and expressed great regret at being disep-pointed. Had he not then been foiled, it is probable that the murderous deed would have been attempted. When leaving Powell's, on the morning of the Ptc-nic, be threw down a letter on the counter, saying to the landlady, 'This will explain all.' This letter is now in the hands of the police, who alterwards searched his room and found some pistol ammunition a crucifix. Dousy Bible, and the Garden of the Soul, with the name H. J. O'Farrell written on the title page of the two books. Also, a quantity of pagers, the contents of which have not been revealed by the authorities.

When arrested a second revolver, fully loaded, was found on his person and while louded, was found on his person and while being secured he exclaimed, 'I am a Fenian. I'll die for my country. God bless Ireland!' He has also said that a commission was sent to him from home to execute the Prince and that ten men had sworn to do it if the lot fell to him. But this statement must be taken cum grano salis. Very few believe it, although it has been much used for political statement. ngaged counsel there, (Mr Aspinall, of the Victoria bar,) who only arrived at Sydney th asked if he had anything to say why sen-jone should not be passed, replied in a firm tone, 'No, nothing sir.' Sentence of death without hope of mercy was then passed upon him by Mr Justice Cheek.

CONFESSION OF O'FARRELL, THE ASSASSIN-Sydney, March 20-O'Farrell has made He stated he intended to have shot at the Prince a second time as he lay on the ground and then to have shot at the prince a second time as he lay on the ground and then to have shot himself, but was prevented by the movement of Sir William Manment, received from the directors of the Fenian movement at home, directing the execution of the Prince, and that each of ten persons entered into a solemn engagement to shoot him, in the event of the lot falling to him.

Lots were drawn by a boy in presence of the ten men. It fell to his, O'Fariell's, lot to execute the Prince. This took place about two months ago. He said he regretted that it had fallen to his lot to kill the Prince; but captain to bring the captain the captain to bring the captain the cap Into the English people or aristoracy, believing that to be the most effectual mode of bringing about the independence of Ireland. The prisoner went on to state that he instended to have shot the Prince on the occasion of the public landing, had a good opportunity of doing so presented itself. He had procured a gun for that purpose and hired a room which commanded a view of the procession. He was deterred from carrying out his intention on that occasion, as there was a probability of the shot taking effect on the Earl of Belmore, who was sitting beside His Royal Highness. He afterwards proposed to carry out his deadly purpose at the Citizens' Ball.

One of the ten men previously referred to wished to accompany him for the purpose of setting fire to the Pavilion by means of inflammable substances which he had in possession, but he (O'Farrell) was unwilling to sacrifice so many lives when his engagement required the death of but one. Subsequently he intended to have accomplished his design at the Fancy Dress Ball, but for some cause was led to postpone it to a more favorable opportunity. able opportunity.

MATRIMONIAL .- A friend from the other side writes: Last week two of the Queen's subjects desirous of entering into a matrimonial copartnership, arrived in town on the eteamer Eliza Anderson, and doubtless finding themselves obstructed by some legal impediment or otherwise while on British soil, they sought relief at the hands of an American Justice of the Peace, through whose kindly offices they hoped to be without delay made man and wife. Unfortunately for their hopes the clerk of the Court refused to issue a license on so short a notice, and the parties yet remain as they came, in the eyes of the law at least, twain. Had our Judge, who is excellent authority in matrimonial matters, especially where a dissolution of the marriage bonds is sought, been present, he doubtless would have speedily removed the disabilities, and our gay Lothario would have long since led his lovely Anathasia to the marriage couch.

BURRARD INLET .- An unusual number of vessels are at present lying at Capt Stamp's mill. There are three loading and four waiting to load, and the whole seven will carry away 500,000 feet of lumber each. Four of these are for San Francisco, and three for foreign ports. There is also a large vessel loading at Moody's mill for San Francisco, making five vessels for that city. There is a strong probability that before long British & Columbia will mainly supply that market with lumber, its great superiority securing it a ready demand at two cents a foot more than lumber had else-

A DESTRUCTIVE fire occurred last month in Liverpool. The warehouses of Mr William Brown, in Errington street off Scotland Road, and tenanted by J Baxter & Co., were destroyed, and with them a large amount of cotton, hemp, provisions, etc. The loss of the cotton is serious as the supply at present is short in England.

THE GAINES WILL CASE .- It is not only in England that long and tedious law suits This case which has just been finally decided in favor of Mrs Gaines by the U S Supreme Court, was commenced by that lady 36 years ago. THE FUTURE OF CANADA .- American papers are all ready to admit that the future welfare of the dominion, and the question whether the northern half of this continent remains British, depends almost entirely upon the wisdom of the present entirely upon the wisdom of the present, action of Canada. The whole American people are watching eagerly to see whether her legislators "rise to the emergency" or not, knowing that upon that depends her fature fate for weal or wee. The New York World says:—"If Ministers and Parliament are wise and liberal in their legislation, the whole dominion will their legislation, the whole dominion will undoubtedly prosper. HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Soundness renewed.—Any indolent uleer or chronic sore a diseased or broken skin, and for rousing its
